"FOUR STRAIGHT" IS CRY OF THE NEW YORK NINE

Pirates, However, Scorn The Fond Wish of The Yankees

PIRATES DETERMINED

Bush Undecided As To Which Pitcher Will Be Started

By James L. Kilgallen
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—"Four straight" was the battle cry of the New York Yankees as they returned home today from Pittsburgh where they rode roughshod over the Pirates in the two opening games of the world series, winning the first 5 to 4 and the second 6 to 2. This is a decidedly ambitious program for no club has made it a clean sweep in the annual baseball classic since the Boston Braves won four consecutive games from the Philadelphia Athletics in 1914.

The idea of four straight is scorned by the Pirates. They are due to win, and they think they will win today when the two clubs resume hostilities in the Yankee Stadium where upwards of 60,000 are expected to view the struggle.

"Don't count us out," said Manager Donie Bush. "We've been in tight spots before. I've got a game ball club with plenty of power and I'm banking on them to show it."

The Pirates were a grim, determined aggregation when their special pulled into New York this morning. They realize their backs are to the wall, that they've got to win now or never. They had no excuses to offer over yesterday's convincing defeat. They were out-hit, out-pitched and out-fielded but not out-gamed. Game-ness did not enter the issue as the pitchers, Vic Aldridge and Mike Clevinger, tossed the game away. They lost the first battle by errors at crucial stages. But so far they have hit almost as heavily, if not as opportunely, as the Yankees, having made sixteen hits in two games as compared with seventeen registered by the New York club.

Bush was undecided whether to start one of his spectacular pitchers, Lee Meadows or Carmen Hill, on the mound or trust the assignment to John Miljus. Meadows and Hill are cagey veterans, a trifle old, but very dependable, while Miljus showed in his relief pitching Wednesday that he knew how to peg them to the Yanks. He stopped them cold, allowing but one hit in four innings.

Manager Miller Huggins of the Yanks will pitch either Herb Pennock, his star southpaw, or Wiley Moore. Pennock's injured knee is almost well and he is eager to get into the series. What effect, if any, a change in scenery will have on the Pirates remains to be seen. They did not have united wholehearted support in Pittsburgh, especially yesterday, when the fans booed Bush for selecting Earl Smith as a pinch hitter instead of using "Kiki" Cuyler. "We want Cuyler," was the cry of thousands of Pittsburgh fans who cannot forget that it was Kiki's heavy hitting that won the world series for Pittsburgh in 1925.

REMUS PLANNED TO KILL COUPLE IN COURT

Dodge and Mrs. Remus Never Appeared at Same Time, However

TELLS OF OPERATIONS

By Theodore R. Todd
I. N. S. Special Correspondent
CINCINNATI, Oct. 7.—"I'd planned to make her killing the most sensational deed in American crime. I'd intended to kill her and kill Dodge as they appeared to testify against me at a hearing before United States Prohibition Director Haynes in Washington."

"It wasn't because I wanted to create the sensation but because I wanted to make so much interest in the case that every detail would be brought out."

"I wanted to make clear in that I would have a chance to bring out every refinement of torture to which she and Dodge had subjected me and let the whole world know her for the kind of woman she was. I couldn't carry that through because they were never in the court room together."

George Remus, one-time Chicago lawyer, the brains and directing genius of the greatest liquor ring formed since prohibition, paced back and forth in the narrow confines of his cell in the county jail today and told his story, the first time he has really walked since the killing.

Remus told for the first time in his life, that his total operations in the handling of illicit liquor in America reached more than $150,000,000. He would not give a figure but from his method of outlining his operations it was evident that his profits from those operations during their period of time, could not have been less than $10,000,000.

"And yet today," he said, "I am practically broke."

"A rag, a bone and a hank of hair"—he said, Kipling doesn't know enough words to tell of her.

"I married Imogene Holmes, made her my wife. I gave her everything that mortal woman, even though the vainest, most self-centered woman in the world, could want."

"I made a queen of her, a queen of a woman of the slums. And she paid me—The fool was stripped to his foolish hide."

"I killed her—yes—and society should vote me a debt of gratitude."

Then Remus, for the first time since the murder, described the death scene.

"I had figured that I would never be able to get Dodge with her that I might kill them both. I felt too in a way, that Franklin Dodge was just a man. He was a prohibition agent, at that. She had fallen in love with him. He could not resist her wiles any more than I had been able to resist her years before, when she took me from the one fine woman I've known in my life—my first wife."

HUNDREDS OF ENTRIES IN ALL DEPARTMENTS ARE JUDGED AT 5TH ANNUAL DOYLESTOWN FAIR

Racing Program Furnishes Thrills—Horse Show Will Feature Today, Which Is Known As Politicians' Day—35,000 Attended on Thursday

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 7.—Perfect weather brought out the largest crowd in the history of the Doylestown Fair yesterday, 35,000 persons being in attendance. It was the third day of the fifth annual exhibition.

An excellent racing program furnished thrills. There were three spills, one of a serious nature when a jockey was thrown from his mount taking a hurdle. The jockey, Joe Williams, of Philadelphia, who was taken to the Abington Hospital, has a fracture of the skull.

Jacob F. Seldomridge, of Lancaster, secretary of the Pennsylvania Association of County Fairs, was among the visitors.

Today will be Horse Show and Politicians' Day. The horse show has attracted more than 200 entries. Many of the suburban Philadelphia hunt clubs have entered jumpers. There will also be a harness and running race program.

Judging of the pet show was completed. The W. Marshall Taylor Farm, Doylestown, carried away many first prizes in the rabbit show. The farm has the largest rabbitry in Pennsylvania. Other rabbit winners were Grace E. Martin, Chalfont; George W. Schram, Jr., Philadelphia; Herbert Fahrens, Hatfield; H. J. Hettinger, Philadelphia, and Mrs. J. Decher, Stockton, N. J.

In the cat show Mrs. Clara L. Ley, of Wycombe; Mrs. H. M. Clements and Mrs. A. W. Herbert Fahrens, of Hatfield, won first prizes.

The guinea pig show brought hundreds of entries. The prominent first place winners included the Taylor Farm, Mrs. Wilson M. Jones, Penns Park, and Clarence D. Hedrick and H. H. Mittman, of Philadelphia.

Other awards were as follows:

LARGE BARN DESTROYED AT NESHAMINY, TODAY

Fifth Fire Occurs in Section Within Period of Five Months

LOSS IS PLACED AT $3,500

Fire, believed to have been of incendiary origin, destroyed the barn of Henry Morgan, Street road near Nesha-miny, Pa., at 2:30 this morning. This is the fifth suspicious blaze in Nesha-miny in five months.

The property, owned by Robert Taylor, is rented to Morgan. Taylor occupies a small building on the farm. Morgan and his family were asleep in the farmhouse, when they were awakened by a neighbor, Louis Cohen, who discovered the fire. Cohen then notified the Warrington township fire company. The barn burned down before the blaze could be checked.

Morgan told Hulmeville authorities that a man had been seen loitering around the barn with a flashlight at about 8 o'clock last night, but as tramps sometimes sleep in the barn, nothing was thought of it.

Taylor told authorities that a bun-galow belonging to him had burned down in the same manner, about eight months ago. Other residents have had fires under similar circumstances, all starting between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning.

The barn contained some hay, furniture, and a new motor owned by Taylor. Damage was estimated at $3,500.

"CY" CALDWELL IS PILOT

One of Three Who Searched For Nungesser And Coli

"Cy" Caldwell, one of the three men who a short time ago searched the barren wastes of Newfoundland for the French fliers, Nungesser and Coli, piloted the passenger plane, "Santa Maria," from Bristol to New York yesterday, on the first leg of its trip to Santa Domingo.

This member of the trio which spent hours flying along the bleak coast of Newfoundland, and searching the inland territory where there are many lakes, as well as a large section of the Atlantic Ocean, is well versed in the aviation game. For three years he was engaged in the air service in connection with the Royal Flying Corps, participating as a night bombing pilot for the British Government. During this work with the 102nd Air Squadron in France much of the period was spent over the Flanders territory.

FOOTBALL BECOMES KING

During the next week or two a certain crown will pass through a shuffling process and end up on a new head. King Baseball is about to be deposed and Football is about to ascend his throne. Their subjects are reconciled to the change so the transition should be orderly, though noisy. The only thing that can cause more stir in the sports world than a world series or a football contest is a world series game and a football contest on the same Saturday afternoon.

No doubt the series will appease the appetite of most baseball fans for another season and it is a certainty the hunger of the gridiron enthusiast is near the starvation point after ten months of fasting.

As the season opens every true fan hopes the differences of the Big Three will be permanently patched up this season and that football history will not repeat itself in this respect. Especially in the field of amateur sports it is desirable that the entente cordiale be preserved. Unfriendly relations are to be expected among mercenary professionals, but are decidedly out of place among amateurs.

For the next several Saturday afternoons the nation will close up shop and jam thousands of university, college, preparatory school and high school stadiums, bowls, grandstands, bleachers and sidelines scattered across the length and breadth of this land. A few years ago football captured the fancy of sport-loving America and there is no indication that its popularity is on the wane.

Baseball is the sport of tired business men, clerks and factory workers. Football is the sport of the fur-coated flapper and school girl, college and ex-college folk, parents of those clad in moleskin, and of many others who at this time of year transfer their affection from baseball to football.

GEOGRAPHICAL DISCONTENT

When the snow flies people up North go South or yearn for the balmy breezes of the southland and the natives of the South dream of the land of snow and invigorating cold. Each has that which the other wants or thinks he wants. If they were to exchange climatic places the probability is both would soon be clamoring to trade back the new for the old. Those accustomed to one climate may yearn for a change, but they will have difficulty in permanently acclimating themselves.

This fall and winter the northerner will envy the southerner who is envying the northerner, but while both are worrying themselves into a fit of discontent nature is getting in her inevitable work of leveling.

Cold weather brings an epidemic of colds, coughs, pneumonia and the other ills associated with winter. It will make life outdoors uncomfortable but will make work indoors a pleasure. At the same time there will be malaria down South, the bugs and heat will make life outdoors uncomfortable and work inside even less comfortable. Man must decide for himself which he prefers.

Children play as hard and as happily in all kinds of weather. There is no valid reason why adults can not succeed as well in adapting themselves to conditions.

SYNOPSIS

It is the summer of 1896; Hank Armstrong has won the Maple City races with his mare, Sloe Eyes. His son, Bob, takes no interest in horses, but is secretly inventing gasoline engines and open-top cars. The Mayor's daughter, Rose, Steve Bentley, who has just returned from the city, makes overtures to the girl and Bob quarrels with him. While Bob is gaining Rose's forgiveness for his dispute with Steve, Hank is fighting for the life of Sloe Eyes, but the mare dies, leaving a colt. Hank's sorrow is increased by Bob's casual reception of the news of the animal's death.

Hank straightened up and groaned. Then he went over to the wall and, taking the picture of his horse from its nail, returned to the bed, where he sat staring at the beautiful head until the blinding tears came. He kissed the nose, covered so coldly by the glass, and his bent shoulders shook. No more races to be run. The very last race was over. No more would Sloe Eyes welcome him with her soft whinney when he entered the stables. No more would she nuzzle down into his pocket for the lump of sugar that was always there. No more flower-wreathed victories; no more grooming for the show; it was all over now. The horseman carefully replaced the picture on the wall.

Then he sat down on the bed and buried his face in his hands and his body was racked with sobs.

CHAPTER V

At any other time Sloe Eyes' death would have been the subject of a week's gossip. But the next morning found the good citizens of Maple City with quite another topic of conversation. The town was buzzing and humming with the news of the arrival of Elwood

Loungers gathered discussing the new-fangled arrangement.

Haynes, the inventor of one of those horseless carriages. Loungers gathered on every street corner and in front of every store discussing this new-fangled arrangement. Bets were laid as to whether or not the entire idea was but a myth. Wagers were made concerning the ability of anyone to ride in such a contraption.

Women lingered over back fences in the warm, autumnal sun discussing the reception to be held at the Mayor's home in the evening. Dresses were being carefully aired after long darkness and moth balls; long white gloves were being inspected for the appearance of spots. Children's clothing was being freshly starched and ironed. It was known by every one in town that there would be lantern slides to illustrate the lecture, and there wasn't a child who would have missed that rare treat of seeing unknown vistas flashed before his very eyes.

Hank Armstrong's livery stable was the central meeting place, and before the door now lounged a group of idlers, deep in argumentative conversation. One of the fortunate had secured himself an armchair, and was tilted back, peacefully scanning The Maple City Gazette.

"Inventor to visit our fair city," he read from the headlines of his paper, while the others gathered round to get a glimpse of the news. "Mayor Robbins plans reception in noted guest's honor," continued the reader. "Elwood Haynes, who is said to have invented a horseless carriage that will run twenty miles an hour without the aid of man or beast, will be in our midst this evening. Our esteemed Mayor is planning a reception in his honor to which all the townfolk are invited."

As the man read Hank came out of his house and stood a little to one side, listening. He looked grave and thoughtful, and his eyes were weary from lack of sleep and sorrow. He was in no mood for discussion. His thoughts constantly reverted to the previous evening, and he sighed, a long, wavering sigh. Little had been said about the death of Sloe Eyes. The news had traveled, naturally, but in the face of a greater event it was not the general topic of conversation.

The reader was deep in his paper. "A horseless carriage that will run twenty miles an hour without the aid of man or beast," he mused, laying the periodical on his lap and gazing at the group about him, nodding his head as though the matter were well worthy of weighty attention.

Dave Doolittle, who had been leaning against the stable door curled his lips disdainfully and shot a stream of tobacco juice off to one side.

"Don't believe it!" he declared scornfully. "No contraption like that kin go that fast!"

The reader tipped his chair forward and rose to his feet, ready for an argument. But as he turned to find backing among the loungers he noticed Hank standing apart, and called to him to settle the disagreement.

"What do you think, Hank," he shouted, "Ain't there a machine that kin go that fast?"

All eyes turned toward Hank, eager to hear the opinion of their respected townsman. Hank looked from one to another.

"Well, it might go up that fast," he smiled "if it exploded."

"Sure, if it blew up," Dave Doolittle guffawed.

The crowd roared with laughter and began to josh Hank, who stood smiling. But the smile soon faded as he turned toward the stables and the thought of Sloe Eyes again took possession of his mind.

Hank walked slowly into the office of his stable and gazed about him. His desk was piled with papers. About the wall were pictures of horses—running horses, trotting horses, tally-ho parties and sporting prints. The horse fancier turned from them with sadness. He noticed the tracing paper and the copy of the Scientific American laying on the floor where he had thrown them the night before. He walked over and picked up one of the pieces of paper and the magazine. He turned the pages of the book listlessly.

As he glanced over the contents his eyes lighted on a much-thumbed sheet. He looked more closely at the printed matter and the photograph shown thereon. The picture was that of the first gasoline engine, with credit for its application to previously horse drawn vehicles given to Elwood Haynes. He read the caption beneath: "New invention threatens supremacy of the horse." He read the notice and then snuffed disdainfully.

Laying down the magazine he turned to examine the tracings. There, on the paper, he saw Bob's crude efforts to elaborate on the engine shown in the picture. And on the corner of the tracings were the words: "Drawn by Robert Armstrong." Hank sniffed again, and frowned. So, that was the reason for Bob's absence from the races. That was the way he was spending his time. His son—his own son fooling around with these engines. Well, by jumping Jehoshaphat, he'd show him. No son of his was going to take up with any such fool notions.

Horses—how he loved them. And he wanted his son to feel the same way about the beautiful creatures. He had worked all his life around his livery stable and the race tracks. His father before him had bred horses—and mighty fine horses, too. And what his father had done his son could do, too.

As he turned toward the door, these thoughts still ranking in his mind, he saw Bob standing there, a newspaper in his hand.

"Gee, dad, isn't it great!" Bob's boyish enthusiasm was running away with him and his spirits were bubbling in anticipation of the great event of the evening. "We're going to get Haynes, the inventor," he explained.

He looked up at his father and saw the expression on the older man's face, as he stood there with the magazine and tracings still in his hand. Bob's smile was replaced by a slightly puzzled expression. He didn't understand why his father looked so stern and wrathful.

"What's all this rubbish?" Hank was thrusting the papers in front of the boy's face.

Bob looked down at the papers in his father's hand and then back again at his father, surprised at the unusual outburst of wrath from this source.

"Why, I was just trying to figure out how an engine could run a carriage," Bob began to explain, interestedly. "It's a wonderful idea."

As Bob paused, Hank stiffened. The two men stood there, silently measuring each other. One, the representative of the old school, the other of the new. One an experienced man, schooled in hard knocks. The other facing life with a joyous outlook.

Teach Them To Save

No lesson the child can learn is more important than that. The boy or girl who learns early to save will form habits of value.

You know the saving you did during the war and the liberty bonds you bought. There is no reason why you should not do this every month and every year.

Due to the never failing power of compound interest and compound earnings, you and your children can grow to positions of wealth and independence.

Our stockholders take shares for investment; to save for the education of their children; to buy a home later on; to have money to care for them as they grow older. Most shareholders pay from five to ten dollars per month. Some pay as high as Two Hundred Dollars per month.

WEARY of old floors? Then come down today and select new floors to cover those old, scratched surfaces in your home.

This is just the time to choose — during our Fall Linoleum Display. Make it YOUR floor-selection week. See the latest Armstrong's Linoleum Floors in our new Jack-O'-Lantern window. Examine our complete and varied stock of new designs.

Come in and see how we cement Armstrong's Linoleum Floors down over quiet, resilient, builders' deadening felt. Smooth beauty, foot-ease, easy cleaning-care, life-time wear... here you get all four at reasonable cost.

Come in and let us prove what we say

WE ARE MERCHANTS.
We have a reputation at stake. We wouldn't ask you to buy any make of radio we couldn't personally recommend.

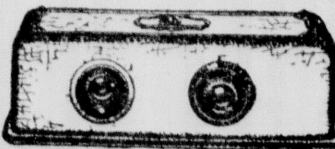

We have tried many kinds. We have taken them to pieces to see how they're made. We have tested them in all sorts of places. We have consulted radio owners and found out who's satisfied.

The result is that we recommend Atwater Kent Radio. It has a good name. It is most in demand—and it is most reliable. Its ONE Dial operation is certainly the last word in quick and easy selection of programs.

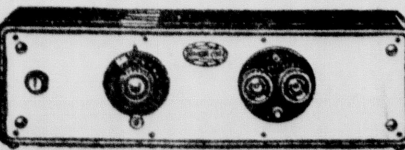

Here's the radio we can sell with peace of mind and you can buy without misgiving. Its price is moderate.
